Some bloodlines never die. They just wait.

CHAPTER ONE - Inheritance

Mara found the letter in her grandmother's attic, sealed with a wax stamp the same blood-red color her grandmother had insisted on for every dress, every door, every birthday cake - and so it had become a family signature, the one thing every Voltaire woman wore.

She slid the letter open.

"Mara - when you read this, I am gone, and so is the part of you that thinks the world is ordinary. Pour yourself something strong. The bloodline is waking up. They're coming for you. Find Aleksandr. He'll know what to do."

She poured the Scotch. She read the letter again.

She still didn't believe it. Not until she looked up and saw her own reflection in the dusty mirror across the attic, and her eyes were no longer green.
